Sleep in Neurocognitive Aging and Alzheimer's Research

The lecture will summarize the possible pathways and consequences that impaired sleep have on neurocognitive impairment and risk of dementia using data from clinical samples and epidemiological-population based studies, with an emphasis on health disparity populations. The lecture will also describe the available treatment options and public health implication for treating sleep disorders in minimizing Alzheimer's and dementia risk.